

Hank

Hank was a man who was down on his luck. He had no cash in the bank. Hank had a van but it was not a new one at all. It was a junk box! It did get him to his job, but now he had no gas in the tank and no cash to get the gas. All day long, Hank sang a sad song. He did not think that things would get much better. This sad song did not help him.

Then he met his friend Ben. Ben said that a sad song would not help him at all. He said that Hank should sell things to get some cash for gas. "What do you have that you can sell?" asked Ben. Hank had some hub caps and a sink to sell. He also had tin cans with pink shells in them.

Ben had a shack and said that Hank could sell his things there. Hank hung up "For Sale" and set up his shop. He had to lug his things up the hill to the shack and it was a big job.

Hank did not think that he could get cash for his junk, but he did! He got a lot of cash for the sink and the hub caps, and the pink shells got him some cash too.

Now Hank could get some gas and get to his job. His song was no longer a sad one, it was one of thanks.